Overlap prompts questions

by Leah Barnum
News staff writer

Similar organizations focus on differences

Editor's note: The following is part two of a series on campus groups that received money from the student-paid general fee last month. The money amounted to $370,818 and was distributed by the Advisory Committee on General Fee Allocations.

The series is attempting to not only answer questions concerning the various funding criteria used by ACGFA, but also the functions of some of the campus groups which received general fee funds.

Overlap. That is a no-no for groups that hope to receive their share of the student-paid general fee. However, the focus of the Advisory Committee on General Fee Allocations on this particular criterion does not appear to be as stringent as some of its other guidelines.

ACGFA has given large amounts of the general fee money to several groups on campus that appear to be rather similar.

And even though members argue that they have differences, the question remains as to whether they are different enough to go beyond ACGFA criterion number five.

The groups in question include: African Peoples Association, which received $5,050; Black Student Union, which received $19,100; Board of Black Cultural Activities, which received $17,200; and Caribbean Association, which received $4,700.

Criterion number five reads as follows: "To the extent possible, requests [for general fee allocations] should not duplicate existing programs, equipment or facilities."

However, those groups have similar goals, activities and members.

The goal of the African Peoples Association, as stated in the BGSU Student Organizations Directory, is as follows: "To educate the public on African affairs through lectures and cultural and social events; to promote relationships between all people of African descent and the University community..."

Similarly, the goal of the Black Student Union is "to orient, facilitate and to foster political, educational and social awareness for black students at the University and to help other students become aware of the issues that face black students."

The Board of Black Cultural Activities wants to "provide events that promote the history, tradition, and culture of the descendants from Africa..." and the Caribbean Association differs somewhat, in that it wants "to promote Caribbean culture, history and politics." Collectively, the groups received $46,050 of the $370,818 total distributed by ACGFA.

Differences among minority groups

- ✓ The African People's Association's goal is to educate the public on African affairs through lectures and cultural and social events.
- ✓ The BSU serves to orient, facilitate and to foster political, educational, and social awareness for black students.
- ✓ The BBCA provides events that promote the history, tradition and culture of African descendants.

Lawyers seek pardon to stop cane flogging

by Kenneth L. Whiting
The Associated Press

SINGAPORE -- Lawyers for an American teenager who pleaded guilty to vandalizing cars say they have until April 20 to seek a presidential pardon that would spare him six strokes of a rattan cane on the bare buttocks.

Michael P. Fay, 18, who is at the center of a controversy between Washington and Singapore, completed his first week in jail Thursday.

Fay was sentenced to the lashing, four months behind bars and a $2,200 fine for spray-painting and tossing eggs at cars last year along with several other foreign youths. The jail term could be reduced by one-third for good behavior.

Fay's final appeal of the lashing was rejected March 31 by Singapore's chief justice, and his last hope for avoiding the cane is a pardon from President Ong Teng Cheong.

The beating is to be done "as soon as practicable," according to the Criminal Procedure Code. The delay in Fay's case is to allow time to process a clemency appeal. Defense attorney R. Palakrishnan said he was directed to file it no later than April 20.

Fay's jail sentence and fine have attracted little attention, but the flogging has stirred a diplomatic controversy. President Clinton and U.S. Rep. Tony P. Hall, an Ohio Democrat, have appealed to the Singapore government, calling it excessive.

If he loses his plea for clemency, the Dayton, Ohio, teen-ager will be strapped to an easel-like frame and beaten on the bare buttocks. Leather padding is supposed to protect the lower spine and internal organs, but rights groups call the whipping torture because it leaves permanent scars. The U.S. State Department criticized the practice in a human rights report last year.

According to Singapore law, the rattan cane, known as a rotan, can be no more than a half-inch in diameter. The lashing end is soaked in water to prevent it from splitting and embedding splinters in the wounded skin.

A juvenile court convicted a Malaysian youth Tuesday of egging and spray-painting cars with Fay and sentenced him to two months in a reform school. The 15-year-old, who cannot be named because he is a juvenile, was not sentenced to a caning.

According to Singapore law, juvenile offenders can be sentenced to a lashing with a lighter rotan. The court did not explain why the Malaysian youth was spared.

Fay's father, George Fay of Kettering, Ohio, said in an interview published Thursday in The Dayton Daily News that he believes the Singapore government is making an example of his son to send "a strong message that the U.S. should not meddle in their internal affairs."

"They're trying to send a strong message to their own people to stay away from Western, decadent ways," the elder Fay said.

The Singapore government denies the American teen-ager has been singled out.

The Vandalism Act was introduced in 1966 in Singapore at a time of ethnic unrest as a way of dealing harshly with organized gangs.

Crash kills presidents

Anarchy, gunfire, violence break out in Africa

by Pauline Jellinek
The Associated Press

NAIROBI, Kenya -- Rampaging troops killed Rwanda's acting premier and as many as 11 U.N. soldiers

Thursday during fierce fighting touched off by the deaths of the presidents of Rwanda and Burundi in a suspicious plane crash.

Reports from Rwanda's capital, Kigali, were sketchy and it was not clear who was involved in the clashes or who was in control of the capital. Amid the violence, three Cabinet ministers were reported abducted and 17 Jesuit Rwandan priests were also reported killed.

In New York, U.N. spokesman Fred Eckhard confirmed that at least 10 U.N. Belgian soldiers had been killed in Rwanda. He said an 11th body has not yet been identified. He had no details on the circumstances of the slayings.

The capital in neighboring Burundi was reported quiet.

Intense gunfire and explosions echoed across Kigali, U.N. spokesman Moutar Gueye reported by telephone. He said that there were reports of house-to-house killings and that the city's streets were empty except for small groups of youths armed with machetes and clubs.

"So far as we can see, it seems that there are a lot of guns in a lot of hands and we don't really know who is giving orders to shoot at who and for what reason," Gueye said.

Kigali "just fell apart," with widespread gunfire and looting on Thursday, Canadian Maj. Brent Beardsley, a U.N. peacekeeper there, was quoted as saying by Canadian Press. He said U.N. peacekeepers had been shot at twice and returned fire.

Gueye said 11 Belgian U.N. soldiers were found killed Thursday after they were kidnapped Wednesday by elements of the presidential guard. The 11 were trying to make their way to the site of the plane crash in the central African country to try to determine its cause, he said.

He said it was not clear if the presidential guards who kidnapped the Cabinet ministers and U.N. soldiers were acting under orders from some authority or were rogue elements.

Sills said U.N. officers were denied access to the wreckage and could not confirm whether the plane was shot down.

Intense gunfire and explosions echoed across the city, U.N. spokesman Moutar Gueye reported by telephone early in the day. He said that there were reports of house-to-house killings and that the city's streets were empty except for small, quick-moving groups of youths armed with machetes and clubs.

Anchor to sit in Perry's seats

by Lawrence Hannan
News staff writer

BG 24 News sports anchor James Ryan will sit in all 30,599 seats in Doyt L. Perry stadium today in return for losing a bet with alternate anchor Andrea Pacione.

The event will begin at 10:30 a.m. and continue until Ryan has sat in every seat.

Ryan is doing this because he lost a bet with Pacione over who would win the NCAA championship this year.

"The bet Andrea and I made was basically a simple office pool," Ryan said. "In the first round of the tournament you got one point for picking the winner, the second round was two points and so on."

"Picking California to be in the Final Four and having the University of Connecticut win it all definitely hurt me," he added.

E.A.R. to the Ground...

From the E.A.R. to the Ground Turning In The Grave File:

The Final Request: A recently-departed Pennsylvania man wants to burn rubber into the afterlife behind the wheel of his beloved white Corvette.

The Big Glitch: The plan has been placed in Limbo by the cemetery's humorless bureaucratic cigar-chompers.

The Solution (Maybe): His wife may bury his ashes in a Corvette-shaped whisky decanter.

Can you imagine his surprise when he reaches the Pearly Gates in an empty hooch container?

We at E.A.R. believe a haunting is in order.

All the Austin, Texas disc jockey hoped to do was promote enthusiasm for reading. That's the reason he encouraged listeners to go scavenging in the local library for the $100 bill he'd slipped inside a book there.

What he promoted was a full-scale melee that trashed the place from A to Z. A money-hungry crowd estimated at 500 swarmed through the stacks to the horror of startled librarians.

When the pillage of the Dewey decimal system was done, 2,000 books lay scattered on the floor.

No one found the booty but the card catalog will never be the same.

Which leaves the gang at E.A.R. Central to wonder how many of those ignoramuses could actually read the books they so thoughtlessly damaged out of greed.

The Madness and the Frenzy

From the You Guys Should Write a Column About That file...

It's springtime. The older kids are wandering around campus visibly wincing in anticipation of the future. Not graduation. Something bigger.

We're talking this week about the reawakening of the monster block parties that are East Merry Madness and Frazee Frenzy.

Note we use the word reawakening, not comeback.

Don't call it a comeback.

This is what we know.

So countless people wander up to us in the Union, confirm that we indeed are "those guys from the paper," and demand to know when we're going to write about the parties. "You know, they're bringing it back this year."

We don't know exactly who they are, but since they are bringing The Madness and The Frenzy back, it is our jobs as journalists to write about it. And we also live on East Merry, so we guess by law we've got to play along.

Hey, you're old and I'm new. What are you two talking about?

Oh. Once upon a time in the happy little village of Bowling Green there were two great springtime block parties. One was thrown on a Friday by the kids on East Merry, so they called it East Merry Madness. The next day those who lived on Frazee threw a similar party, and they called it Frazee Frenzy.

Kids from all over the tri-state area journeyed to the village of Bowling Green for the block parties. They came to party in the apartments, to party in the houses and to party in the street.

Everybody shared cool refreshing beverages. Everybody listened to loud punk rock. And we mean everybody. Women and men. The Greeks and the independents. Democrats and Republicans. The seniors and the freshmen. Browns fans and Steelers fans.

It was a celebration of springtime, a celebration of the end of the school year. And we'll go so far to say it was a celebration of love. It was like OU's Halloween without the costumes. Like Lollapalooza without Perry Farrell.

And it was a beautiful thing.

Some dismiss it as just a beer bash, but it was more than that. There were bands and barbecue, and most importantly, just a bunch of happy college kids wandering around and mingling.

The next morning, hung over enviro-kids would pick up all the cans for recycling, and we'd get on with our lives.

Everything dies, baby that's a fact...

About four years ago, the whole thing kind of died out. Some misunderstandings, some politics, you know. So now we're looking at the first generation of BGSU students that have lived without The Madness and The Frenzy. The End?

But maybe everything that dies someday comes back...

But don't call it a comeback.

We've got this friend and his name is Charlie and we think Frenzy. Charlie says this is the year for its rebirth.

"You can't stop it; you can only hope to contain it," insists Charlie. He shows us the flyer. He says he has seen the T-shirt design that they have been working on.

"Hey, can you guys put the official date in the paper?"

Sure! East Merry Madness is going to be on Friday, April 22 and Frazee Frenzy is Saturday, April 23.

"C'mon, this is big. Use bold Charlie is part of they, but we're not sure. Anyway, Charlie is an old-school wily veteran who remembers The Madness and The type, or something."

East Merry Madness is going to be on Friday, April 22 and Frazee Frenzy is Saturday, April 23.

"I got the house, I got some kegs. I'm prepared. I'm ready. Let's go, let's go. I'm ready for The Madness and The Frenzy. All of my friends are ready. Hey! Are you guys ready?"

"I said ARE YOU READY FOR THE MADNESS? ARE YOU

READY FOR THE FRENZY? ARE YOU READY?"

"I'm ready. And you can put that in your little newspaper column."

Okay.

Sam is an old-school wily veteran who remembers The Madness and The Frenzy. As a little freshman, Sam remembers his surprise and joy from wandering from party to party, because there were no closed doors. And there were no problems, no vandalism.

Sam remembers it was a happy time. No one was mean, no one was angry. Just a lot of friendly people, some sober, some silly drunk. But everyone was friendly. The weather was nice, everyone was casual...

Mike is an old-school wily veteran who remembers The Madness and The Frenzy. Mike remembers escaping from the deathtrap that was the Old Founders with a pack of freshmen and sophomores, meandering toward "the apartments" to find some parties. The weather was always great for these parties, always.

And the parties were always great, always. Two-fistin' beer and dancing on someone's table to "Twist and Shout." It was a crazier time, a friendlier time. And Mike thinks The Madness was one of the first times he partied with Sam, giving birth to a never-ending series of punk-political-wonk adventures.

So yeah, we're ready for The Madness and The Frenzy.

Are you ready?

See ya there.

Is Michael Fay's flogging sentence an acceptable form of punishment?

Singapore law has sentenced American Michael Fay to six hits with a soaked, 4-foot-long, half-inch-thick split-bamboo rod as punishment for vandalizing cars.

Foster Amey, the president of both the Caribbean Association and the African Peoples Association, said the two groups over which he presides are different.

He said the Caribbean Association, which has about 25 members, focuses on the cultural perspectives of people from the Caribbean, which is geographically very different from Africa.

"Our main purpose is to unite the campus through reggae music," Amey said. "We have a reggae band come twice a year — once in the fall and once in the spring." He added that they also co-sponsor activities with other organizations.

The African Peoples Association has about 50 members and sponsors such events like African Week, Amey said.

Throughout the week the group presents two movies about life in African countries, a cultural evening with a dinner and a fashion show and a speaker about the problems faced by African Americans, Amey said.

It also co-sponsors speakers with other groups, he added.

However, the goals of the African Peoples Association are quite similar to those of the Black Student Union.

The president of the latter group, Samuel Jackson — also known as Samuel X — declined to talk about the organization.

"I'm not interested in getting used for the mudslinging that's going on about the ACGFA distributions," he said.

The adviser of the organization, Rick Nash, could not be reached for comment, either.

The goals of the African Peoples Association and the Black Student Union are basically the same as the purpose of the fourth group, the Board of Black Cultural Activities.

However, JeJuana Brown, president of the Board of Black Cultural Activities, said they are different from the other groups because they approach things differently.

She said the Black Student Union approaches events from a political standpoint, rather than a cultural standpoint, like the BBKA.

For example, the events the BBKA organizes include things like movies, plays and speakers on black culture. On the other hand, if the Black Student Union were to have a speaker, he or she would probably speak from a political perspective, Brown said.

The BBKA is also different from the African Peoples Association, she said.

"The African Peoples Association is different in the sense that it is geared more toward people from Africa," Brown said. "We deal with things more from an African-American point of view. We're taking different approaches."

BBKA has eight members on the board and eight members on the planning committee. They plan events for the 487 black students on campus, she said.

"Every organization has its own different style," she said. "There are times when it seems like they do the same things, but with the outcome of the program you can tell [the differences] — it's how you go about it."

ACROSS THE NATION

Promotion leads to chaos

FORT WORTH, Texas — People stormed the Fort Worth Public Library, tearing pages from books and throwing volumes on the floor, after a disc jockey hoping to encourage reading announced that he had hidden money in the stacks.

"Times are tough. I don't know if they're that tough, though," said Marsha Anderson, library spokeswoman.

People were "climbing the shelves, stepping on each other and elbowing people in the face" to get at books Tuesday, Anderson said.

When it was over, the library was in shambles, with several thousand dollars worth of damage. No one was hurt.

Listeners of KYNG-FM disc jockey A.W. Pantoja told library officials that the country station had hidden up to $10,000 in the books. But program director Dan Pearman said Pantoja had offered only $100.

"He thought putting a few dollars here and there might motivate people to go to the library," Pearman said Wednesday.

The Dallas station said it will pay for the damage.

LOS ANGELES — As time goes by, it was bound to happen.

Warner Books has asked two writers to come up with a sequel to the movie classic "Casablanca," Daily Variety reported Wednesday.

The project — as of now dubbed "Casablanca, the Sequel" — consists of a book, followed by a miniseries, the Hollywood trade paper said.

The idea came from the success of "Scarlett," the 1991 sequel to "Gone With the Wind," said Nansey Neiman, who will edit the book.

Banquet honors students

Greek chapters will host, receive annual spring awards

by Courtney Gangemi
News staff writer

Greek students and chapters will be honored at an annual Spring Awards Banquet Monday night in the Lenhart Grand Ballroom in the University Union. This year's theme is: Scholarship "The Key to Our Future," according to Scholarship Chairwoman Briana Creech of the Panhellenic Council.

"All greek students are invited to support their chapters," Creech said. "Others are also invited, along with house directors, greek advisers and special VIPs," Creech said.

Following the awards banquet, a reception for award winners, their parents and all VIP guests will take place.

Among the awards presented will be the highest pledge class average, given by Alpha Chi Omega; Interfraternity Membership Development Award, hosted by the Interfraternity Council; the highest big/ill' sister average by Alpha Xi Delta; the Sigma Chi Scholarship Award by the Sigma Chi chapter; and the best chapter improvement award, hosted by Pi Beta Phi.

Each award is given out annually by various chapters. The awards are competitively sought by chapters, Creech said.

"There is a lot of competition between the chapters for some of the awards," Creech said. "A lot of hard work and devotion goes into seeking each honor."

Sigma Alpha Epsilon will give the Clayton C. Kohl Scholarship Award, the highest chapter award will be presented by Delta Gamma and Alpha Phi will honor the total chapter average.

IFC will present the dean's male scholarship award. Kappa Kappa Gamma will award the honor to the female winner. The Panhellenic Book Scholarship will be awarded by Panhel. Alpha Gamma Delta will give the Panhellenic Spirit Award.

Other sponsors include Sigma Kappa for the Outstanding New Member Class, and the G.A.M.M.A. Award presented by Greeks Advocating Mature Management of Alcohol. The Dorothy "Mom" Buttner Outstanding Unit Director Award is sponsored by Phi Kappa Tau. The

ASC approves wage increase based on merit

by Leah Barnum
News staff writer

The Administrative Staff Council on Thursday approved a recommendation to increase salaries according to merit for the 1994-95 school year.

The ASC approved the following recommendations, which will have to be passed by the Board of Trustees before they can be enacted:

■ The emphasis for University budget increases should go toward increases in salaries.

■ The salary increases should be distributed on a 60-40 percent split across the board on merit.

If the 60 percent does not meet the projected rate of inflation (3.0 percent in 1994), then more than 60 percent should be used to bring the across the board salary increases up to the projected rate of inflation.

■ Merit raises should be distributed to individuals according to standard and consistent work evaluations, as being recommended by the Personal Welfare Committee.

■ Merit monies should be distributed to departments across the board. Also, salary increases for merit should be announced as a dollar figure and not a percentage increase.

"I think this is realistic," said Marcia Latta, director of relations. "I think it's very good."

Currently, the University is in fifth place among Ohio state universities for average salaries, according to Bob Waddle, director of capital planning, who spoke on behalf of the salary committee of the ASC.

"We've always targeted ourselves for fourth place," Waddle said. "We're more than 6 percent behind the University of Toledo, who is in fourth place. We're closer to last place than our goal of fourth place."

In other business:

■ Ten new members were elected to the ASC. The chairwoman-elect is Pat Green, administrative director of photochemical sciences.

■ Out of 32 applications, the scholarship committee has narrowed the possible winners down to three. The finalists will interview with the committee next week, according to the committee chairman, Scott Bressler.

For men and women who like to do modeling, either for fun or for a potential career, Haake-Beck non-alcoholic beer is providing opportunities for people who like to stay in shape.

Haake-Beck's "Shape of the Nation" contest is open to men and women who are at least 21 years old.

Carolyn Waesche and Shannon Henaghan, representatives of the corporation and coordinators of the contest, said they expect entries from people of all ages who exemplify a healthy lifestyle which relates to their cholesterol and fat-free non-alcoholic beer.

"We want people who best represent Haake-Beck," Henaghan said. "The contest is geared for people with a fit lifestyle, who enjoy drinking beer without all the alcohol."

The contest is a good opportunity for people who want to start a modeling career and it is simply meant for people who like to be healthy, Waesche said. The contest is not out to exploit anybody in any way, she said.

"[The contest] is for both men and women who stay fit in mind and body," she said. "It is a good chance for [potential models] to get a foot in the door."

Waesche said they have already started receiving entries from throughout the country, many from college campuses, of people displaying themselves in swimsuits, body suits and short pants.

"Our sales force is divided into eight regions across the country. A male and female semi-finalist is picked from each region," she said. "Then we pick one man and woman from the batch of semi-finalists."

To enter, send in photographs of yourself to the Haake-Beck Shape of the Nation Contest, P.O. Box 1339, Glastonbury, Conn., 06033. All entries must be received by August 31, 1994.

Felon's sentences suspended

by Tara Stubbs
News staff writer

A North Baltimore man who originally faced a 34-year maximum sentence for three counts of abduction, attempted rape and burglary instead received three years of probation.

Andy Garcia of North Baltimore was indicted for actions occurring in November. His three counts were removing a woman from the place where she was found without privilege to do so, attempted rape, trespassing and theft.

Garcia was to serve a maximum of 12 years in prison, but the concurrent sentences were suspended.

Conditions of Garcia's probation are as follows:

■ He cannot associate with any other person on probation or parole or any person convicted of a felony offense except members of Alcoholics Anonymous.

■ Garcia is not permitted to drink alcoholic beverages or go to establishments which serve alcoholic beverages for the purpose of consuming alcohol. He cannot be employed as a bartender.

■ He must either attend Alcoholics or Narcotics Anonymous and submit verification of attendance to the Probation Department. He must also be evaluated by the Wood County Council on Alcoholism and Drug Abuse and successfully complete recommendations for treatment.

■ Garcia must contact the Wood County Mental Health Center for an evaluation and successfully complete all recommendations for treatment.

■ He must complete 50 hours of community service work and obtain his General Education Diploma.

Siefker said obtaining the G.E.D. is a major part of the program. In doing so the defendant should be able to handle living in society. Obtaining the G.E.D. also should provide a chance for permanent employment and make the defendant more self-reliant.

Some special conditions were added to general probation conditions in Garcia's case. One special condition is referral to the Intensive Supervision Probation Program, which he must successfully complete.

"[The] Intensive Supervision Probation Program is set up by the state through grants to assist in the prison overcrowding situation, especially locally."

Tom Siefker, community collection coordinator, said the Intensive Supervision Program is used instead of sending people to prison.

"[The] Intensive Supervision Probation Program is set up by the state through grants to assist in the prison overcrowding situation, especially locally," Siefker said.

Garcia must serve 30 days in the Wood County Justice Center with eligibility to apply for work release and to enter work release if accepted into the program. If accepted the defendant must obey all the rules and regulations of the Work Release Program. He must also obtain and main-

New art exhibit to open

by Jim Vickers
News contributing writer

Most people envision paintings and sculptures when they think of art. But now a newer type of art is becoming popular in Bowling Green due to the efforts of a University organization and a local business.

The work of the University's Computer Art Club will be presented tonight at the opening of a computer art gallery located at the Answer Factory computer store, 106 S. Main St.

The opening of the display will take place from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. and showcase 35 works by 19 University students.

Jim Youll, owner of the Answer Factory, said the gallery is a way to soften up the cold image of computers.

"We wanted to show that computers are not just for counting money or printing paychecks," he said.

Youll said the gallery is the only one of its kind in the area and he wants people to view the students' work as art, not just a gimmick.

"I want the art to have its own identity, truly separate from the computer store," Youll said.

Matthew Karlovec, a board member of the club, said the organization is trying to bring computer art into the mainstream.

Greeks to host ball for charity

by Courtney Gangemi
News staff writer

The Panhellenic Council will host a charity ball this month to benefit a 5-year-old local boy with leukemia who needs a bone marrow transplant.

The Joel Edward Pruden Charity Ball will take place April 28 in the Lenhart Grand Ballroom in the University Union. The proceeds will go to The Precious Boy Fund in honor of Joel, according to Maggie Wickert, co-chairwoman of the Charity Ball committee.

"The charity ball is a small effort to try and raise money for Joel," Wickert said. "It's an opportunity for students and the community alike to support a worthwhile cause, and could make all the difference in the world to this little boy."

A silent auction will be occurring throughout the evening, according to Paula Waltman, co-chairwoman of the event.

"We were trying to think of another way to receive donations from the community to support Joel," Waltman said.

Items will be available outside of the ballroom to place a bid on. Bids will be written on paper and placed in boxes in front of each item.

Professor produces videos

Educational collection combines earth science and media

by John Gibney
News staff writer

While many students and faculty members know Laurence Jankowski as a journalism professor at the University, some may not be aware of his interest in science.

For close to 20 years, Jankowski has produced educational and instructional videos for earth science classes all across the country.

"I wanted to combine my interest of earth sciences and the media," Jankowski said.

The former high school science teacher's collection of science videos is now one of the largest in the world.

The videos contain virtually every geological force that has shaped the United States, Jankowski said.

Jankowski sends some of his shots, often live-action footage, directly to a producer, who in turn distributes the videos through a quarterly publication.

These videos are more generic in that they consist of footage that any classroom in the country can use.

Other times, however, Jankowski shoots, edits and produces the videos himself and markets them on his own.

For instance, Jankowski will travel to the New England states in May for a video shoot. After the 12-day trip, Jankowski will spend close to a year editing the footage, eventually resulting in a 20-minute video.

These more specific shots will then be produced and marketed by Jankowski to teachers and schools in that region.

Scott Resources, the distributor for some of Jankowski's videos, has re-released his entire series on laser discs. Because of the uncertain future of VHS tape, more schools are using laser discs.

"You can do anything with laser - the quality is much better," Jankowski said.

Jankowski said he is the only professor to have a whole earth science series on laser disc.

Jankowski and his three full-time employees keep busy in their West Toledo studio. Besides New England, two other video shoots are planned, and requests

"They want more from me in the future. They have given me a wish list of shots they need," Jankowski said.

Along with film in the Carnegie Institute Natural History Museum, Jankowski said he probably has science videos in every school in the country.

Men look to weather UT Preseason game offered to OSU

by John Boyle
News sports writer

Weather permitting, the Falcon baseball squad hopes to resume Mid-American Conference action on Saturday as they open a four-game weekend series against arch-rival Toledo.

BG's last four games -- a doubleheader against Akron and single games with Notre Dame and Tiffin -- were all postponed due to rain and snow.

The Falcons obviously can't control Mother Nature and may not be able to control the Rockets' bats.

Coming into weekend action, UT is near the top of the MAC in most offensive categories.

The Rockets (6-9 overall, 0-2 MAC) pound out 8.27 runs per game and are fourth among conference teams in stolen bases with 27 and batting average at .303.

Individually, first baseman/pitcher Joe Przeniczny gives the Rockets one of the MAC's most potent two-way players. Przeniczny, an All-MAC honorable mention selection in each of the past three seasons, is hitting at a .417 clip and is second league-wide with 26 runs batted in.

As well as being their best offensive threat, Przeniczny is also the Rockets' top pitcher. The Toledo native has a 3.15 earned-run average in 20 innings pitched and sports a 2-0 record this season.

"He's an outstanding hitter and a tough pitcher too," BG head coach Dan Schmitz said. "He's a double threat, there's no question about that."

Other than Przeniczny, the Rockets' pitching staff has been awful. Toledo's team ERA of 8.98 is last in the league. The opposition is batting an incredible .334 off the staff.

Coming off the spring trip, Schmitz was hoping to shore up the Falcon bullpen. Non-conference games last week with Ohio Dominican and Dayton gave him the opportunity to get some of his younger pitchers some work. This past weekend, Scott Stalker and Eric Stachler gave Schmitz exactly that with fine performances from the bullpen.

"We feel that we have more depth on pitching staff than we've had in the past," Schmitz said.

BG's starting staff is led by right handers Jason Tippie and Jeff Dominique. Tippie is 2-0 and leads the league with a 0.97 ERA. Dominique has surrendered only seven hits in 11 innings pitched. His 1.64 ERA ranks him second in the league.

Offensively, the Falcons will look to rebound after a lackluster series at the plate against Akron.

COLUMBUS, Ohio -- Ohio State, co-champions of the Big Ten last season but with 13 holes to fill in the starting lineup this year, has been offered a spot opposite Fresno State in the preseason Disneyland Pigskin Classic Aug. 29 in Anaheim, Calif.

Whether or not Ohio State accepts is up to head coach John Cooper and the team, OSU athletics director Jim Jones said Thursday.

"After I hear from John and the players, I'll run it by the people above me," Jones said.

But Jones said earlier that if the coaches and players want to play in the game, he did not anticipate any opposition from Ohio State administrators.

"It's not during the school year, so I can't imagine anybody would have any major objections," Jones said.

Don Anderson, executive director of the Orange County Sports Authority which stages the game, said Ohio State would make the perfect opponent for Fresno State.

"We would be very happy to have Ohio State," he said by telephone. "If they tell us they want to come, then we will give them a formal invitation. ... We've never had a Big Ten team and we would very much like to have one."

Last year, North Carolina beat Southern Cal 31-9 in the fourth annual classic. In 1990, Tennessee and eventual co-national champion Colorado played to a 31-31 tie. Florida State beat Brigham Young 44-28 in 1991 and Texas A&M edged Stanford 10-7 in Bill Walsh's first game back with the Cardinal in 1992.

Pigskin Classic teams are guaranteed $550,000 for playing, but last year Southern Cal and North Carolina each received $720,000.

Fresno State, a five-hour drive from Anaheim, brought more than 26,000 when it played in the postseason Freedom Bowl two years ago. The Freedom Bowl is also played at Anaheim Stadium. Anderson said he anticipated a similar turnout at the Pigskin Classic, which would raise gate revenues and provide a bigger payout to each team.

Ohio State would give this year's game national recognition and would all but guarantee a large television audience, further increasing the payout, Anderson said.

Fresno State coach Jim Sweeney contacted Cooper earlier in the week. Jones said he was approached by representatives of Raycom, which is televising the game, while he was at the Final Four in Charlotte, N.C., last weekend.

If Ohio State agrees to play, it would give the Buckeyes a game under their belts before they make another trip to the West Coast to play at Washington Sept. 10. Washington opens its season Sept. 3.

Softball opens MAC season

by Jamie Schwaberow
News sports writer

The Falcon softball team has been hanging out in the gloomy insides of the Field House all week waiting for a chance to play a game, since having Tuesday's confrontation against Ball State canceled. They should get that opportunity this Friday with the nice weather rolling in, and will take on Central Michigan.

CMU comes in to the competition tied for first place in the Mid-American Conference along with Akron and Ball State. Each team posts a 3-1 record. For the Falcons, this will be their first MAC game.

The Chippewas feature star pitcher Beth Osterland. Last week she was named MAC player of the week. She is a senior who posted a 12-7 record with a 1.75 ERA last season.

They are also returning senior outfielder Brenda Schrader. She batted .329 last year with 15 RBIs (runs batted in).

"Central has been good for years and they have a quality pitcher in Beth Osterland," BG coach Rachel Miller said. "They are expected to be one of the top three teams in the league."

BG is coming off of a very successful weekend against Cleveland State in which they won both games, 9-1 and 3-1.

"We are so ready to play after last weekend's success," Miller said. "Also we are looking forward to starting our MAC competition."

Lisa Mountjoy and Jennifer

"We are so ready to play after last weekend's success. Also we are looking forward to starting our MAC competition."

Rachel Miller, head softball coach

Wolf will be the two starters for the Falcons this weekend. Mountjoy and Wolf were excellent last weekend. Mountjoy allowed only three hits, while striking out five. Wolf also held Cleveland State to three hits and struck out 10.

This week BG has been concentrating on offense while inside.

"We haven't been taking grounders while being inside because we don't want our players getting used to the artificial hop off the turf," Miller said. "Therefore we have been getting a lot of good cuts in."

Friday's double-header will start at 2 p.m., with Saturday's twin bill starting at noon.

"A TRADITION THAT'S OUT OF THIS WORLD"

APRIL 9, 1994

Kent sports on cutting block

KENT, Ohio — Kent State University President Carol Cartwright has recommended that the school eliminate its men's gymnastics and ice hockey programs to save money.

"The decision to eliminate any sport is not one that is taken lightly because it affects the lives of young people," she said Tuesday. "Unfortunately, this decision was necessary in light of cost containment pressures."

University officials estimate that cutting the two programs will result in a savings of at least $340,000 if no athletes in those sports transfer to other schools next year.

The university has said that it would honor the scholarships of current athletes in both sports for the remainder of their four-year eligibility periods if they choose to remain at Kent.

"Usually if a sport is cut, athletes will transfer to other schools so they can still participate in the sport," said university spokeswoman Dale Gallagher. "If that happens, the university has estimated that it could save as much as $629,000."

The recommendation came after consultation with the university's athletic committee, which consists of faculty members, student-athletes and an alumni representative. Mrs. Cartwright asked the committee last fall to develop a method for evaluating the university's 18 intercollegiate sports. The committee considered factors that included expenditures, revenue and attendance.

The Kent State University Board of Trustees is expected to approve the recommendation at its April 13 meeting.

Both the men's gymnastics and ice hockey teams have concluded their 1993-94 seasons.

Former BG grad named to MAC Hall of Fame

TOLEDO, Ohio — Football coaches Don Nehlen of West Virginia and Jim Corrigan of Kent State and former NFL quarterback Gary Hogeboom lead a class of nine selected for induction into the Mid-American Conference hall of fame.

Also selected were former Ball State President John Pruhs, Eastern Michigan distance runner Gordon Minty, Miami of Ohio

men's basketball coach Bill Rohr, Ohio U. women's basketball player Caroline Mast Daugherty, Toledo football player Tom Beutler and former Western Michigan athlete, coach and administrator John Gill, who gave the school its Broncos nickname.

Nehlen, a 1958 graduate of Bowling Green, quarterbacked the Falcons to a record of 21-2-4 and the MAC title in 1956. He served as an assistant coach and then head coach, going 53-35-4, at his alma mater. He is 103-56-5 in 14 years at West Virginia.

Bengal balloons to 400 pounds

CINCINNATI — Is offensive lineman Tom Scott another player eating himself out of a professional football career?

He's ballooned to more than 400 pounds, and the Cincinnati

Bengals sent him to a fat farm Thursday in Orlando, Fla., to work it off.

"I usually know if I'm putting a few pounds on," said Scott, a sixth-round pick in last year's NFL draft. "But this time, I didn't realize it was that way until I actually got on the scale. It was a big shock to me."

Women juggle lineup on road

by Steve Wildman
News sports writer

The BG women's team is headed for Miami — unfortunately, to the university in Oxford, Ohio where they will be taking on Miami University, Purdue University and the University of Michigan in a non-scoring meet.

In this non-scoring meet, head coach Steve Price plans to do some things differently.

"Our main goals are to have some of our athletes establish personal records, break the four by 100 relay outdoor school record and to experiment by putting people in events that they normally don't run," Price said.

The four-by-100 relay team of Julie Shade, Jane Moeller, Kaleitha Johnson and Clarice Gregory have a shot at beating the outside school record of 47.11 seconds. The relay team has already run a time of 47.12 this year.

What changes are going to made at the meet?

Michelle Mueller and Jennifer Devan, who usually run the 800-meter, will be competing in the 400-meter run.

Julie Shade regularly competes in the 200-meter dash but at Miami she will be running in the 100-meter hurdles.

Jane Moeller, who usually runs many events, will only be participating in the 100 hurdles, the triple jump and the four-by-100 relay.

This non-scoring meet does not mean that BG won't have any kind of a challenge on their hands. Michigan should provide them with all the competition they can handle.

"The University of Michigan has one of the best distance running teams in the nation — they are going to be quite a challenge," Price said.

NCAA qualifier Nikki Lessig will be traveling with the BG men's team this weekend at the Sea Ray Relays in Knoxville, Tenn.

Lessig is a provisional qualifier for the NCAA tournament because she has already thrown over the 47.5 mark in the shotput. Her throw of 48.3 at Toledo is only four-and-a-half feet away from the 52.5 mark she needs to qualify for the NCAAAs.

Sending Lessig to compete at the Sea Rays Relays instead of Miami may be important to her athletic development.

"I feel it is best to expose her to competition against national level athletes in Knoxville," Price said.

Lessig is not the only BG athlete getting prepared for the NCAAAs.

Indoor All-American Scott Thompson needs to run a time of 14.04 seconds to be a provisional qualifier for the NCAAAs in the 110 high hurdles. In order to be an automatic qualifier, Thompson will have to run a 13.72 or lower.

"I feel that if the conditions are right, Thompson could be well under 14.00 and easily be an automatic qualifier," said Price, who also coaches the men's hurdlers.

5 kinds of fans at park

by Todd Stanley cleanup man

This year, the battle to see which Ohio team will succeed in their division will come down to one thing -- desire. Who wants it the most, who's going to fight the hardest, or who's willing to make the sacrifices? If last Friday's Ohio Cup is any indication, Cleveland should do very well, while Cincinnati won't fair as good.

Both teams made interesting acquisitions in the off-season. The Indians picked up veterans Dennis Martinez, Jack Morris and Eddie Murray. Since pitching is what hurt the Indians last year, a healthy Morris and Charles Nagy could make the rotation very potent. The Reds add two infielders, youngster Brett Boone at second and Tony Fernandez, of last year's championship Blue Jays, converting from shortstop to third, to take over for the spot Chris Sabo's absence left. How these new players do could decide the future season for both ball clubs. On paper, both teams look good, but on the field, the Reds lack something. At the Ohio Cup the Indians seemed more focused, more like a team, while Cincinnati played like a bunch of individuals, something which has plagued them the last couple of years.

The season hadn't even started yet when Rob Dibble was up to his old whiny and selfish tricks. Fernandez, one of the best shortstops defensively of all times, isn't happy with the move to third. At the Easter Sunday opener, he showed as much effort as a waterlogged tennis ball, not even trying to run ground balls out when there were close plays. He even got hit by a pitch, but because he made no effort to move out of the way, the umpire didn't award him his base. Boone is playing second with the rigidity of a concrete statue, making only one error, but fumbling routine plays. Rijo pitched without much inspiration, giving up a double that resulted in two RBI's to St. Louis pitcher Bob Tewksbury.

The success of the teams could lie on the shoulders of lesser-known players. First baseman Paul Sorrento and awesome rookie Manny Ramirez both hit homeruns at the Ohio Cup, both potentially could hit over thirty in the season. The Reds have Reggie Sanders and Hal Morris as their secret weapons. In the first two games of the season, Sanders has had a homerun in each, and Morris consistently has hit over .300, but will need to improve his RBIs in order to help the team.

This year could see a flip-flop in the popularity of the teams. While the Cleveland season opener sold out, the Reds opener (which I attended) sold a paltry thirty thousand tickets and seemed like a mid-season Mets game and not a season opener for a potentially good team. Prediction for season ending standings: Cleveland will finish second in their division behind the White Sox, and the Reds will finish third. Whether each team succeeds or dies in the water, this fan will be watching them both.

And speaking of fans, through many years of attending baseball games from Toronto to Chicago, I have discovered that there are five types of fans. The first and worst are the people who come to the game for the sole purpose of acting like a complete moron. This is the person who sits behind me at every game, paying attention to nothing, and is usually yelling (even though nothing is going on), heckling players that are not even on the field or calling for the firing of managers that left two seasons before. I had one of these jokers sitting behind me at Sunday's opener, and he kept yelling, "put Brantly in," even though it was the first inning and Brantly is a late closer. When Brantly finally did come in in the ninth inning, this guy didn't even notice. There should be a five day waiting period when this jerk wants to purchase tickets.

Second is the person who comes to the game only for social reasons, attending with their friends of significant other because they had nothing else to do. This person has no desire to watch the action going on, they become bored and talk throughout the entire game including the National Anthem and "Take Me Out to the Ballgame." I'm not asking people not to talk during the game, this actually adds to the atmosphere, but this person manages to suck all the attention towards them, distracting those around them and ruining the game for others.

The third fan, mostly kids, are those that only want to see the big names. They would rather catch a glimpse of Bo Jackson sitting on the bench than a spectacular play by a lesser-known player. They judge the worth of the players by who can sell the most shoes than who can hit the most RBI's. They could care less about actual ability. They get bored when their player isn't up and pass the time by stomping on empty cups, trying to make a loud popping sound by merely spraying pop or beer on those around them.

The fanatic fan is number four. This person wears team logo shirt, pants, jacket, underwear nipple-rings, and anything else made with their team on it. Last year at a Reds game, a lady sat in front of me who whenever Chris Sabo came to bat, see put on a pair of Sabo goggles, then took them off when he was done. She was very scary as are most these fans because they are borderline psychotic and would shoot you to get a foul ball that comes up in the stands.

The fifth fan is the one comes to the game to have a good time by watching the sport that they love. For some odd reason this is a rare kind of fan. They yell, but only when a good play is made; they talk, but not throughout the entire game; they want to see the big names, but enjoy the average player as well; and maybe they wear a shirt and cap or the team they're rooting for. They pay attention to detail, sometimes keeping score, and truly love baseball. I believe that I fall into this category, but I always end up surrounded by fans one through four. I guess I'm just going to have to put up with it until someone takes my proposal of a 'no idiot' section of the stadium where the fifth category of fan can enjoy the game.

Well, sports fans, it's that time of the year again. That's right, baseball season is finally upon us, and we at Insider are BIG fans of the national pastime.

I met up with my close friend and one-time colleague Dean Wheeler (of Scott and Dean Insider Infamy -- we're BG's original tag team journalists) and went to Hooters (in the Cleveland Flats). Then we headed over to Jacobs field, where we met up with Kirk "The Terminator" Pavelich and Julie Tagliaferro -- from that other publication -- and commenced watching the first ever game at the new stadium. The day before, our own Todd Stanley checked out the Ohio Cup baseball exhibition in Columbus. Then Melinda "Scott, tell me again what my story is" Monhart comes in and tells me about the first baseball game she ever went to. To top that off, I dialed up Lisa Mountjoy from the Falcon softball team and Mike "Alvin, Simon" Kazimirov talked to Falcon baseball ace Andy Tracy for another huge '20 Questions.' I tell ya, we got baseball coming out of our ears here at the ratcage. And we like it.

Anyway, there we were, awestruck in a beautiful new ballpark. I tell you, the perks of being journalists/sports fans like us are never-ending.

Is this Heaven? No, it's Insider

Twenty Questions ...

Andy Tracy

When he's not punting for the Falcon Football team, Andy Tracy is hitting up a storm for the Falcon baseball team. Our buddy Mike Kazmore sat down and got the dirt from him just for us.

You're a local product straight out of BG high school. Why did you decide to attend BGSU?

I didn't really think about BG until my senior year in high school. They were one of only three schools that were going to let me play both sports and that's why I decided to come here.

The baseball team got off to a strong start over spring break - what was the key to the success and will the team be able to continue its fine play during the season?

The key was that we had strong hitting throughout the lineup. We need to have good pitching and defense, if we get that then we'll be okay for the rest of the season.

What kind of transition do you have to make from football to baseball season?

The sports are totally different. In baseball you have to be more relaxed, but in football you need to be more aggressive. Baseball is easier because you have to be more relaxed and use patience because you're playing something like 56 games a year whereas in football you only have 10 games.

Artificial turf or natural grass?

Definitely natural grass.

Ever use vaseline when you're out there on the mound? No, but I've sliced a ball before. If you pull a seam out a little bit it helps you get a little more drop on your curveball.

Earlier in the year a certain sports-writer called Brandon Carner the best two-sport athlete at BG. What did you think of that?

Carps and I had a talk about it. He's a good athlete but I think that I'm up there with him.

What do you think is going to be higher this year - your ERA or your batting average?

Hopefully it will be my batting average because I'll be in trouble if it's the other way. I probably won't be pitching too long if it's the other way either.

Brauthaus seems to be the bar of choice for the football team. Is there any one bar that the baseball team likes to frequent?

Not really because we play on the weekends so we really don't go out that much. But if we do go out we usually go to Mark's.

Are there more baseball or football groupies on campus?

Definitely football.

What's your opinion on the banning of tobacco in college and minor league baseball games?

I think that it's really terrible.

Do you guys ever try to sneak some chew to the games or have you made the transition to sunflower seeds?

Coach is pretty strict about the chew so we switched to seeds.

Okay, here's the situation: The bases are loaded with two outs in the bottom of the ninth and you come to bat with your team trailing by three runs - Lisa Mountjoy is the opposing pitcher. Do you take her downtown?

I would just try to put the bat on the ball and see what happens. I probably couldn't hit her though because I don't know if I could hit that underhand heat. That stuff's pretty nasty.

Being a two sport athlete do you think that you go through more jock straps than the other athletes?

Uh, I don't wear one so I really don't know.

One question that Howard Stern constantly asks baseball players, but never gets a good response to is, "Ever fart in the catcher's face?"

(Laughs) No, I never have. I've exchanged some choice words with catchers but I've never farted in one's face.

Twenty Questions ...

Lisa Mountjoy

Junior pitcher Lisa Mountjoy is one of a handful of standouts from the Lady Falcon softball team. A control pitcher with one hell of a changeup, Mountjoy traveled all the way from El Sobrante, Calif. to take classes and rack up K's in BG. Scott DeKatch called her up and she agreed to play ball, so here we go. Oh yeah, she would like everyone to know her roommate, Janice, "is the coolest chick."

So you're from California?

Yeah.

Long way from home, eh?

I wanted to go far away from home because all my life I've lived in California. I wanted to try something new and Ohio was the farthest place, so I'm here.

What if I said you serve up meat?

I'd challenge you.

Oh yeah, What if I said you throw like a girl?

(Laughs) People have said that before. I challenge them and then I sit 'em down.

On the collegiate level, do you think women's athletics are put on a back burner to men's athletics? Yeah, I think they are ... to revenue sports.

How does that make you feel?

I think across the board, the women's athletic programs do so well, so I think we deserve more, uh, respect, maybe.

What is your favorite baseball movie?

Field of Dreams, definitely.

See MOUNTJOY, page seven.

Heaven? No, Cleveland.

by Kirk Pavelich
.333

"Is this heaven?"
"No, it's Iowa."

Just as Shoeless Joe Jackson wondered about Ray Kinsella's farmland field of dreams in the movie of the same name, I couldn't help but think the same thing upon my entrance into Jacobs Field.

Actually, I thought for a brief moment that I had somehow taken a wrong turn on the highway and ended up at the immaculate ballpark of some other American League team. This couldn't possibly belong to Cleveland. This couldn't possibly be the place where the Indians will call home.

"Hey man, this is too nice to be Cleveland's. We've got to be on the road," my friend muttered as we entered the park, making it clear that the thought was not unique to me.

But after pinching myself to make sure I wasn't dreaming, I actually started to believe. The Indians were now the actual owners of the classiest ballpark in all of baseball. And even better, I started to believe that the city of Cleveland was the actual owner of a legitimate baseball team ... finally.

As a lifelong resident of Northeast Ohio, I've had no choice but to evolve into being an avid fan of the Tribe. Like any Cleveland fan, I can rattle off the short list of accomplishments and long list of lowlights in the futile history of the franchise.

Last World Series Championship: 1948 vs. the Boston Braves.

Last World Series Appearance: 1954 vs. the New York Giants, which resulted in a four games to none New York sweep.

Last Actual Pennant Contention: 1959.

Last American League East Championship: 1989. The Tribe captured the division championship in a one-game playoff with those hated rivals the Yankees when Willie Mays Hayes hooked home for the winning run in the bottom of the ninth inning.

Oops, I got a little carried away. That one actually took place in Hollywood -- not Cleveland -- during the filming of "Major League." You'll have to forgive me, but when you go your whole lifetime rooting for a team that never has a winning record, you often find yourself starting to dream.

This year is different. I really believe it. But then again I did back in 1987 when Joe Carter, Brett Butler, Cory Snyder and Pat Tabler were bringing their lethal bats back from a team that had actually won six more games than they lost the year before.

The rest of Cleveland and myself were hyped. Sports Illustrated picked the Tribe to win the American League East. The result? A du record 102 losses. The eternal hopes of spring are dashed again Cleveland. What else is new?

But I sincerely believe this year will be different. I may have had my doubts when the Tribe dropped the exhibition game to the Pirates 6-4 in 10 innings. Some comments heard afterward ranged from: "New ballpark, same old Tribe" to "Here we go again."

But all of those doubts were erased during Monday's regular season opener when the Tribe rallied twice to defeat the Seattle Mariners 4-3 in 11 innings.

New park evokes old memories

by Julie Tagliaferro
a league of her own

I can still remember the day I saw my first major league baseball game. It was also the same day history was made, for a BoSox fan anyway. The great Carl Yastrzemski played his last evening game at the "Green Monster," Fenway Park.

A beautiful ballpark, a hero playing one of the final games of his life, and a young ball player named Wade Boggs just beginning his career with the Red Sox -- it was an amazing site for a 10-year-old.

I can remember the feelings of pride all the fans had for Yaz, the Red Sox and Boston, as balloons filled the Boston skyline during the emotional, festive night.

I loved how the fans cheered when Yaz was up to bat and how, when he took his final run around the field, there were tears of joy and remembrance and smiles that wouldn't fade even when the game was over.

I wondered if I would ever see that enthusiasm at a sporting event again and for the next ten years, I didn't -- not until last season, when I went to the last three home games of the Cleveland Indians in Cleveland Municipal Stadium.

A New Englander, I will always remain a Boston Red Sox fan. However, as I watched the Indians players of past and present stand on the field together last October while pictures of the greatest moments flashed across the scoreboard and fireworks erupted, I again found that feeling of loyalty to a team and the true love of baseball.

It didn't matter that the team lost all three games, the fans stood behind the Tribe to say farewell to the stadium where some great moments in baseball occurred.

Saturday, when I tagged along with a devoted Indian fan and two crazy guys rooting for Pittsburgh to the first game ever to be played in the new home of the Tribe -- m Jacobs Field, I thought I would again see the same dedication displayed six months ago.

After all, here was a beautiful new ball park which could very well signify a new beginning for the Indians. With an old-fashioned, closed-in design and yet a huge scoreboard and jumbotron, angle seats and glassed-in luxury suites fans could come to root on their team and feel a mixture of modernity and the age-old love of baseball.

And while there were 40,000 fans -- a sellout crowd -- dressed in Indians garb from head to toe, there was not the lively enthusiasm and cheers of support that I had thought there would be.

Perhaps the most amount of spirit came from the children, including the two young boys proudly sporting their homemade signs demanding that "Pittsburgh smells" and "the Pirates should go home."

But aside for a few devoted fans who boisterously screamed, most of the crowd, while enjoying the beautiful day, appeared fairly lethargic, even when the Indians were winning or the game went into extra innings.

Now, I understand that there were so many other things to explore -- from the large variety of foods, including Mexican, Chinese and even cheesecake, to the many gift shops and souvenir stands, the unisex restroom -- HMM -- and of course, the playland area for children.

And while those were special attractions (and money making plays -- $3 for a slice of pizza, come on!) the main reason for being there

First game can be a learning experience

by Melinda C. Monhart
on deck

As an American it is automatically assumed that everyone is born with an innate love for sports, and what could be more American than taking a trip to the ball park? Among certain circles this fact may hold some truth. However, I am not afraid to admit that I spent the first 20 years of my life without coming within arms reach of any ball park and I am still alive to tell about it.

All of this changed last March when I met my boyfriend, Ross Capers, who has a love for all sports and is an avid fan of the Cincinnati Reds. This was an interesting situation for myself because I had basically no knowledge of the sport let alone did I find any excitement in sitting in front of a television for a few hours as a bunch of sweaty men ran around a grass field swinging a bat to hit a stupid little ball. (This story does have a point, just keep reading.) At the time I would have preferred to be doing anything else in the world, but I kept reminding myself to have an open mind and try to enjoy myself.

Last summer I came to visit Ross in Bowling Green one weekend and in the process of making plans I told him that I wanted to go to a baseball game. Ross told me later on that he was surprised I wanted to go to a baseball game because of my widely known disinterest for sports. On Saturday June 5 at 7 p.m. I attended my first minor league baseball game, the Toledo Mud Hens vs. the Pawtucket Red Sox. Throughout the entire game I threw a barrage of questions at Ross, who happily answered every question I had. He broke away from my stereotype that a man would rather have a woman simply pass him a beer than be bothered by a bunch of nagging questions during a game. I went to this game expecting that I would have an okay time, but I ended up really enjoying myself, to both of our surprise, and learning about the game in the process.

I felt ready to move up into the major leagues with my newly found knowledge. I had discovered something that we could both take part in. When it came time to find a birthday present for Ross, I wanted it to be a sure hit. I decided that I would get two tickets to a Cincinnati Reds game, along with a baseball cap and t-shirt displaying the team's logo. This ended up being the perfect gift for Ross and another exciting venture into the world of sports for myself.

A historical event took place on August 15 as Ross and I took a road trip from Grove City (near Columbus) to the Riverfront Stadium in Cincinnati to attend what would be my first time at a professional sporting event. As I sung the national anthem with my fellow spectators, I felt a special sense of patriotism and a feeling that I belonged there. I wondered if this was the feeling that kept diehard sports fans returning to lend their support to these sports teams.

The game began at 7:05 p.m. with the Cincinnati Reds up against the Atlanta Braves. I sat in the stands among true fans like Ross and others who appeared to be fair weather fans. I also learned what a bandwagoner was that day and wondered if I appeared that way in my brand new Cincinnati Reds t-shirt and tried to blend in with the crowd. As we left the ball park that day, after the Reds had a disappointing loss, I felt that I had set foot into a whole new world of learning.

Since that game I have attended other sporting events with Ross, along with hours in front of the television every weekend as I successfully made it through my first baseball, football and basketball seasons. Ross and I have tentative plans to take another road trip this summer even though I hate to admit I will need a refresher course in baseball terminology.

If I can survive an introduction into the world of sports and enjoy it enough to return, there is a small glimmer of hope for other men out there with girlfriends who hem and haw when game time comes around. I have learned to understand some sports, which allows me to be able to sit through an entire game. I would like to send out the message that if you have ever gone to a professional sporting event, give it a chance because you might surprise yourself and have a good time. I do have to say that I enjoy sports to a point, but I will never be able to sit for an entire weekend glued to a television set just to watch a game, ask Ross. Since I have opened myself to his interests, Ross has actually lived through several plays and an opera. Between the two of us it goes to show that anything is possible if you just put your mind to it. I did.

Melinda poses at her first major league game.

Insider goes out to the Nostalgia clouded by greedy scavengers

The cool, wet air of April ushers in real spring. Skies are blue, the dirt smells new and everything is clean.

O h y e a h
it's baseball season.

by Scott DeKatch

Such a mystique hovers over our national pastime. Whether it's the smell of a worn leather glove that fits like a hand, the crack of Louisville ash sending one into the window of the shop across the street from the left field wall, the lightning-quick sting in the hand from a just-in-the-nick-of-time pickoff or a combination of all of the above, baseball is a thing embedded in the collective spirit of this nation each time parent and child play that first backyard game of catch.

Saturday saw me waxing nostalgic from the moment my phone rang at 8 a.m. It was Dean (of Scott and Dean Insider) Wheeler, my old sidekick and pilot of the Dean-Mobile.

"You ready to go to the game?"

"Give me five minutes."

After a tricky job of navigating, we arrived at the Cleveland Hooters (a fine family restaurant) in full gold and black Pittsburgh Pirates garb. One of the famous Hooters girls, scantily clad in a cut-off T-Shirt (a big surprise at Hooters) eyed us and said, "You guys are wearing the wrong colors today."

"Oh yeah?" we said. "You must not have been here in October for the Steelers-Browns game."

We were seated at the bar, where we drank and talked about -- what else -- sports. Sure, the conversation started out about the Bucs and Tribe, but we're all-around Pittsburgh fans, Dean and I are. Soon we were talking about a prospective Pittsburgh NBA team.

"Yeah, but they'd have to get Barkley and Laimeer out of retirement if they wanted it to float," one of us said. "They like 'em mean in the Burgh."

"Well, at least Xavier McDaniel would have a starting spot again."

Needless to say, we came back to baseball. Being die-hard Bucs fans from the time we could walk, the conversation was nostalgic and dismal. After all, we witnessed baseball's all-time greatest outfield (Bobby Bonilla, Barry Bonds and Andy Van Slyke) ship out to New York, San Francisco and the Pittsburgh home for aging sluggers with bad shoulders, respectively. We were watching when Jim Leyland pulled Doug Drabek from a near-perfect game seven of the 1992 NLCS only to have our World Series dreams crushed by Stan Belinda's meaty hurling. Damn near wept last April when we went to Three Rivers just to see Bonds and the Giants make the entire Pirates franchise look silly. In other words, we love those Bucs.

So we hurdled some police barricades, knocked over some innocent bystanders and stumbled into our seats in time for the first-ever pitch at Jacobs field. How exciting! Four throws later, Pittsburgh had a runner on first, thanks to Chuck Nagy's wild pitching.

The park itself is a beautiful place, conjuring memories of the scene in Bull Durham when Kevin Costner tells Tim Robbins how the ballparks in the majors are all cathedrals. At least if you don't think about things too much. The seats hug the field and there's not a bad place to sit anywhere. Behind the right field wall, the neighborhood skyline rises like a scene from a great, old movie. On a sunny day like this was, there are few places I'd rather see a game.

But then you start thinking. Tickets to games at Jacobs field cost about twice as much as their Municipal Stadium counterparts. Beer is $3.50 for 12 ounces and the hot dogs come smothered not in everybody's favorite Stadium mustard, but in some yellow goop that tastes more like horseradish than mustard. Although Jacobs Field's capacity is half that of its predecessor, an upper-level seat behind home plate is 50 feet further away from home plate than its Municipal Stadium counterpart, so as to allow for cushy, glass-encased seating for a bunch of money-grubbing cutthroats who think they deserve to be at a game more than Joe Q. Workingman, who is already lucky to be able to take the kids to three or four games a season.

Now, while it may seem I'm just a bit disgruntled, or merely using this as an excuse to rip on Cleveland sports, there is a means to my madness.

Recently, the big focus in Major League Baseball has been a nostalgic one. Dollars are generated from the sale of old-time uniforms. Movies like The Babe and Field of Dreams have sparked a new interest in the time "when it was a game." At special events, teams wear old-fashioned uniforms. Teams are moving into brand-spanking-new old-time ballparks like Baltimore's Camden Yards and even Cleveland's Jacobs Field.

At the same time, the people upstairs at MLB central are scurrying around on the floor of professional sports, scavenging what they can. The new realignment of the leagues and the new playoff system it created are an insult to anyone who has ever loved the game at its face value. Call me stupid, but a 162-game season is played so the four best teams in baseball can be weeded out, so that the final weeks of the season can be chock full of excitement and heartbreak (last season is a good example). All the new system will do is build false hope in towns like Pittsburgh and Cleveland and drag out the season longer in order to have the same two teams play in the World Series. It all boils down to money. The people upstairs see the cash potential and don't care what their actions do for the integrity of the game. While the new shuffle may result in more fans attending games, it could also result in people like me, who were raised believing baseball was a perfect, untouchable institution, losing heart for the last time. The days when it was a game are gone with the wind, folks.

The game itself was loaded with irony. The 40,000 strong, sellout crowd was unusually silent. Maybe because they were used to the old scoreboard antics at Municipal Stadium, maybe even because it was still the preseason. Who knows, but the only people singing "Take Me Out to the Ballgame" during the seventh-inning stretch besides us were a few other Bucs fans. Hell, whenever we would cheer for a good play -- and good plays were few and far between -- the fussy Tribe fans behind us would accuse us of acting like children. Now, Dean and I have been to Pittsburgh-Cleveland football games. In both cities. Until this game, I thought Cleveland sports fans were among the best in the world. And I've been to a ton of games at the old park, so I like to think I know what I'm talking about. What became of the days when "Indian Fever" rang through an 80,000-strong stadium? I was truly disappointed. Especially when the game went into extra innings. The only consolation was a victory for my team, and even that is tainted by the fact I consider myself a fan of both organizations.

The Pirates won 6-4 in 10 innings. We said "later" to Julie and Kirk and headed back to Hooters, where we stood on the deck drinking beer, getting high on baseball. The wind was just right, and, to top things off, two Hooters girls with Hula hoops asked us what our plans for the night were. I guess Hooters girls can't resist two guys in Bucs garb. After all, everybody knows real men wear black and gold. Our newly-stroked egos were in for a letdown, though. We couldn't hang out with the Hooters girls because we blew all our money parking.

But it was all right. Our day's mission was done.

"It was a nice game," I said on the way back. "Too bad we didn't have enough money to go out with those two."

"Yeah," Dean said.

"You know it," I said, and drifted off into a sleepy dream about a beat-up glove, a homemade bat and a brand new pair of shoes.

Pirates catcher Don Slaught is just a bit late in tagging Indian Albert Belle during the inaugural exhibition game at Jacobs Field.

It was a hot summer day, or at least hot for early April, and the way the sun pierced through the sun-roof of the DeanMobile, I thought we were in store for a bikini-ridden, shirtless adventure in the heart of a tropical paradise called Cleveland, Ohio. My trusty co-pilot Scott DeKatch (at least trusty while he managed to stay awake) directed me to the closest possible parking place to Hooters, where we would engage in intellectual discourse while sipping a fine spring nectar (Budweiser).

But Jacobs Field was the real reason we were in town, and not even the perilous temptation of the Hooters girls could stop us from making it to the inaugural game between the Pirates and Indians. So we loaded ourselves back into the DeanMobile and set a course for Gateway.

It was five minutes before Charles Nagy was to throw the first pitch ever in the fine establishment's history when my car screeched to a halt and nudged a guardrail. We threw open our doors and dashed 90 feet through the stairwell with over four minutes to spare. No traffic cop on horseback was going to stop us now --

DeKatch was on a roll. We ran across East 9th Street and were home free, zipping past security guards and finally stumbling through the white pearly gates (they were actually aluminum turnstiles, but what the hell), we made our way to section 570 and fell into our seats just in time to watch the Bucs' lead-off batter take his base on balls.

But we made it. There was no real reason why we shouldn't have made it. I guess I was just overwhelmed by the scene. Forty thousand-plus baseball fans sitting quietly in this brand-new old-style baseball park where the world champion, or soon-to-be-world champion, or maybe-they'll-never-win-a-world-championship Cleveland Indians were kicking off a season in which they are expected to perform better than they have in years. But this was Cleveland and ... well ... you know.

The game itself was exceptional. It was a seesaw battle with the lead changing hands a number of times due to poor pitching, but, nonetheless, it was an exciting game. The crowd could never really get into the game, though. This may have

As I entered the restroom I was surprised to see people actually waiting to use the urinals and sparing the sinks of their liquid by-product. I have been to baseball and football games at Municipal Stadium before, and each time the been because it was pre-season and the outcome had no bearing on anything, but anytime you sell out a stadium for an event you would expect some enthusiasm. Few people sang "Take Me Out to the Ballgame," a surprise in any ballpark filled to any capacity.

As the game wore on the seats got harder, the sun fell lower and I developed an incredible urge to check out this facility's restrooms.

sinks were used in place of the urinals. But Jacobs Field, for the time being, is receiving more respect. As the season wears on and the Indians fade into being a sub-par baseball team, I'm sure that respect for Jacobs Field will fall, too.

Pissing in urinals isn't necessarily a bad thing. Maybe it's just what Indian fans need to make them a little nastier. Turn Jacobs Field into a nightmarish cavern where opposing teams are afraid to enter because of the psychotic state of the fans. Rename the park Jacobs Ladder and put landmines in the outfield. Cut off fingers for every base-on-balls issued by an Indians pitcher and play night games with the stadium lights turned off. Now this season is shaping up to be one reminiscent of a Steelers-Browns football game. Hallelujah!

I made it back to my seat relieved and weighing a little less than when I left. The game was winding down and the Indians were holding onto a one-run lead in the top of the ninth when an Indians pitcher, with bases loaded, walked in the tying run. The Tribe couldn't rally in the bottom of the ninth and we headed to extra-innings.

In the top of the tenth I cracked. The Pirates scored two runs and took the lead and the Pittsburgh spirit instilled in my blood since the day I was born (or maybe it was the Iron City beer) took over and sent me, DeKatch and two fellow black and gold wearin', Pirate fan yellin', happy with our disposition in Cleveland buddies into a rage. This provoked an onslaught of vulgar language and rude comments from the Cleveland bleacher creatures, but we were not phased. After all, we got to leave Cleveland after the game.

Mustard, anyone?

by Mike Cook get yer red hot

Hey all Dedicated Clevelanders. Forget everything you've seen on TV or read in the newspapers about the mustard they're serving at Jacobs Field, 'cause nobody knows what the hell they're talking about.

The old Cleveland Municipal Stadium, which was a great place despite what the neo-power Tribe fans will try to tell you, served a condiment called Joe Bertman's Ball Park Mustard. It was brown, it was good and everyone referred to it as Stadium Mustard.

Anyway, 'round 1989, the life company that produced Ball Park Mustard raised their price and the vending company at the Stadium, Service America, refused to buy anymore. So they thought about going to make ketchup yellow mustard, but that would've ruined sales rising. It's a Cleveland thing, you've got to understand.

So they found a less expensive and very similar mustard, so they said. There was still some stinging, but everyone calmed down, 'cause it was still pretty good. The masses were also calmed by the stinging and familiar name of the mustard. It was called Stadium Mustard.

So Jacobs Field opened and their vending company, SportService, decided to go back to Joe Bertman's Ball Park Mustard. And the mustard made some money. "Jacobs Field is nice, but they don't serve Stadium Mustard."

Well, no, it's not Stadium Mustard. But it's the same mustard you've had at the Stadium from the early 1930s to 1989. Get it? It's the old mustard, the traditional mustard, and I'd say it's the better mustard.

But that I'm a Sportservice spokesman or anything, I'm just a disinterested fan, dog vendor and a journalist. So it's my public duty to speak my mind as well as the truth.

So, you think you could strike out, oh, Barry Bonds?

Yes.

How about Swampy?

He'd probably be a challenge.

Who has the best haircut, BG News sports editor Mark DeChant or Falcon basketball dandy Jay Larranaga?

Jay Larranaga, definitely.

Have you seen the new Jacobs Field?

Yes, I have.

What do you think of it?

We just drove by on the bus. I didn't really see inside it.

Who is the toughest batter you've ever pitched against?

My brother. He hits against me all the time, so he's good at it now.

Tougher than Barry Bonds?

Yes.

What's your take on Michael Jordan's attempt at invading MLB?

I think he should give it up.

Speaking of Michael, should he and Larry Bird let Charles Barkley play with them?

Yeah, what the heck.

Ever beaned a batter?

Yes. I hit a girl on the face once and knocked her out.

Was it on purpose?

No.

Ever thought about playing another sport, a la Deion Sanders?

Yeah, I'd be a golfer. They make lots of money. And there's no running involved.

What's with all this snow in April, anyway?

I don't like it. I like the nice, sunny California climate ... to play ball in.

Is there life after softball?

After I graduate, I want to go to Europe and play in leagues over there. I'm just going to keep playing and whatever happens happens.

I.

Belle, Kenny Lofton, Carlos Baerga, Jim Thome and Manny Ramirez providing the offense, and veteran hurlers Dennis Martinez and Jack Morris providing the pitching and leadership, I believe this team is one that will, for once, not let the fans down.

And with Jacobs Field providing the state-of-the-art backdrop for the young and exciting team, I have no doubt that, for once, this will be the season to remember.

was to cheer on the Indians in their new home and in their quest to improve their record.

Once the novelty of the new ballpark dies down, hopefully the fans will be able to focus on the real beauty of Jacob's Field -- the game of baseball that is played there and the team that maybe, just maybe, can take it all the way to the World Series this year -- that is unless the Red Sox stop them along the way.

Hey, I can at least hope.
